Made in America Panel Predicts that America is headed for a Constitutional Crisis if Executive Branch Continues to Circumvent the Judiciary

Neal Asbury began his nationally syndicated "Neal Asbury's Made in America" show on Radio America by proposing that the Obama administration is doing a terrible job fighting for the American people and job creation. There is a void in leadership that is failing to address the country's most pressing issues: job creation, health-care, energy, education, regulatory reform, and access to foreign markets.

"I don't see a firm commitment by this president to free enterprise and entrepreneurship, and the support of small business. There is no clear vision," said Asbury.

In addressing Obamacare, Asbury suggested that as you unpeel Obamacare, it begins to "reek like a rancid onion."

New projections put the cost to implement Obamacare at $1 trillion, and adding $1 trillion to the already bloated budget deficit.

Joining the show as a guest was Republican Larry Buchson, a Congressman for Indiana's 8th congressional district. He is a heart surgeon and a Navy veteran.

Congressman Buchson suggested that Obamacare will add trillions to the national deficit, and the inherent costs will cause businesses throughout the country to close their doors.

"The entire spirit of entrepreneurship is being crushed by the coming uncertainty of the costs to implement Obamacare. The threat of new taxes is going to hurt this nation's job creators. They can't hire and they can't grow their businesses," said Congressman Buchson.

Co-host Rich Roffman agreed, and added: "Isn't it ironic that Nancy Pelosi warned that if Obamacare wasn't passed, it would harm business? And now that it has become law, business is really being harmed."

The Congressman is particularly angry that the Obama administration has declared war on coal an important energy commodity in Indiana, where 95% of Indiana's energy generation relies on coal.

"The decisions regarding coal production are not based on fact, and even the judiciary can't seem to intervene. But we're pushing back. If we can't get a hearing in the courts, we're trying to get a hearing in the court of public opinion," concluded the Congressman.

Neal and co-host Dr. Rich Roffman turned the discussion to the impact that two comprised secrets is having on compromising job creation.

"The first secret involves the Supreme Court's supposed secret deliberations over the constitutionality of Obamacare, which will compromise job creation since the cost will be staggering and ultimately passed on to American businesses in the form of higher insurance premiums and taxes. This only prolongs the anxiety, pain and suffering of the 25 million Americans that are unemployed or underemployed," said Asbury.

Two days after the Supreme Court heard arguments on both sides of the issue, as is their custom, the justices convened a secret meeting to deliberate the law. Yet, the week after the deliberations began, President Obama became unglued and criticized the justices and cast aspersions on the very process that is the foundation of our separation of the Executive and Judicial branches. Neal suggested that Obama may have discovered that his healthcare plan was in trouble, so he took the offensive.

"An equally menacing corruption of secrets is taking place in the workforce. Unions are trying to push through Card Check, even though it was turned down when presented to Congress. Card Check gets rid of the sanctity of the secret ballot, which is fundamental to American democracy. It forces employees to divulge their vote publicly when union elections are being held in a place of business. The corruption of the secret vote – a constitutional right is being promoted so unions can intimidate workers and force them to accept unionization even if they object," said Asbury.

Unions then force employers to hand over the names of all employees including home addresses, phone numbers and personal email addresses.

Made in America's next guest was Shannon L. Goessling, Executive Director for the Southeastern Legal Foundation, an Atlanta, Georgia-based public interest law firm and policy center. The Southeastern Legal Foundation is a national constitutional public interest law firm and policy center that advocates limited government, individual economic freedom, and the free enterprise system in the courts of law and public opinion.

She characterized recent rulings by the Obama administration as a "constitutional crisis."

"When President Clinton instituted his statistical sampling policy (which was used by the Democratic party to exaggerate the count of members of minority groups, many of whom tend to vote Democratic), we thought that that hit a new level for ignoring the constitution. But President Obama has far exceeded that with Obamacare and his other policies," said Goessling.

She gave as an example, rewriting the Clean Air Act by categorizing carbon dioxide as being harmful to humans, which she describes as "absurd."

"This country was built with Checks and Balances on the three branches of government, but today the executive branch has exceeded its power. This is not only troubling since President Obama is a supposed constitutional scholar, but that Congress doesn't seem to be able to stop these new unconstitutional initiatives," Goessling added.

"When laws are passed that are unconstitutional, the citizens should get the benefit of the doubt, not the government," she concluded.

In keeping with Made in America's role to promote U.S. entrepreneurship, joining the show was Marc Van Buskirk, CEO, Managing Director & Founder of GovX.com, a privileged e-commerce Web site where qualified members of the U.S. Armed Forces and those in related government agencies can shop for premium off-duty apparel, equipment and other products as well as on-duty tactical products.

Prior to founding GovX.com, Van Buskirk worked with Oakley, Inc. for 25 years, where he formed the company's military and government sales division and successfully built the operation to over $60 million in annual revenues. Van Buskirk has longstanding relationships with the key military branches and related government agencies including the FBI, Secret Service, Border Patrol, DEA as well as police, fire and other protective and enforcement agencies, which helped him launch GovX.com.

"We think that the military and first responders should have exclusive access to the best prices on leading brands. So we now offer 52 brands, which will grow soon to 70 brands, that agree to offer their products to our customers at large discounts, but without impacting their brick and mortar retail operations," said Van Buskirk.

He noted that a percent of profits go back to organizations that support the military and first responders. And that many of his employees are former veterans and first responders.

The show concluded with a review of the administration's energy policy failures, starting with the 2-3 million jobs that would be supported within 24 months simply by advancing fossil fuel and crude oil production and distribution.

"Our energy policy is just wasting away," said Asbury.

Co-host Rich Roffman noted that while the administration is waging a war on coal, the U.S. is the "Saudi Arabia Of coal," based on the 107 billion tons of coal that the U.S. exported last year, combined with 500,000 barrels of petroleum. This added $88 billion to the U.S. economy.

"OK, if Obama wants to stop the use of coal for energy in the U.S., let us at least ship the coal overseas, where we get twice the price we get here in the U.S. while also maintaining U.S. jobs," said Roffman. "The energy industry is dying to ramp up production and hire, but they've been shut down by the Obama administration," added Roffman.

The discussion, as it does every week, turned to the Obama administration's belief in cronyism.

Dr. Roffman reported that the latest example of cronyism was the $5 million dollars provided to a methane plant that uses cow manure to produce their energy. That comes to more than $330,000 for each of the 15 jobs that were created.
